

INFORMED CONSENT

By accepting this statement, I hereby undertake that the activities I choose to carry out in and around the Ibera National Park, Portal Carambola, a privately owned natural wilderness area, located in Concepción del Yaguareté Corá, Province of Corrientes, involve risks inherent to the land and natural conditions, which are subject to unforeseeable and unexpected changes due to the forces of nature. The risks include, among others: damage to individuals or property, including death, caused by falls, illness and/or injury related to the weather, as well as to animal and/or plant life and the geology of the land; inclement weather such as high winds, rain, extreme heat and/or cold; risks associated with contact with dangerous animals, among others.

I declare that I am physically fit and do not have any health conditions or any other problem that would prevent me from carrying out the activities that I have decided to do. I also understand that the activity I will carry out is located in an area far from medical centers, causing delays in the evacuation and treatment of any medical emergency or illness. I understand that there are risks related to decision making and human behavior in a rugged area. I understand and accept that the above risks may not be all and that other unknown or unforeseeable risks may give rise to damage or harm. I agree to undertake all responsibility for the consequences of exposure, both to the risks described herein and to those that are not. My access is voluntary, and I choose to perform the activity even though I am aware of the risks involved. My informed consent extends to those entering with me and in my custody, whose physical fitness and health are adequate for the activity to be performed.
